

The Poverty and Human Development Report (PHDR) provides a consolidated national analysis of trends in development in Tanzania.

PHDR 2009 is the fifth in the series published since 2002. This report marks the end of the first phase of MKUKUTA. It is a key document for reviewing the accomplishments of MKUKUTA and for examining the challenges facing the country. The report is structured in three chapters.

Chapter 1 reviews progress towards key development targets based on the national indicator set for MKUKUTA's three major clusters of desired outcomes: growth and reduction of income poverty (Cluster I); improvement of quality of life and social well-being (Cluster II); and governance and accountability (Cluster III).

Chapter 2 expands on the status of income poverty reported in the first chapter. It provides analysis of household well-being in Tanzania since 2000/01 using new data from the Household Budget Survey 2007.

Chapter 3 outlines the role and principal functions of the State in economic management and the broader socio-economic transformation of Tanzania. This discussion is central to the development of MKUKUTA II, including delineation of the roles and responsibilities of all development actors in realising the national vision.
